Features of ethnic identity of migrants in the Far East of Russia

The article reveals the theoretical and methodological approaches to the adaptation of migrants, the characteristics of migration flows in the region over the past five years, the features associated with changes in the ethnic composition of migrants, the selective and enclave nature of their settlement in the Far East. We use the results of sociological research related to the analysis of possible scenarios of transformation or preservation of ethnic identity of migrants, taking into account their life plans and social attitudes. The variants of implementation by the authorities of different forms of inter-sector interaction on realization of ethno-cultural adaptation of migrants in the conditions of the multinational region are offered.

Keywords: migration, ethnic identity, diaspora, ethno-cultural adaptation, transformation of ethnic identity, public mechanisms of management of sociocultural adaptation, inter-sector interaction, enclave settlements of migrants.
