Analysis of trends in the development of youth potential of the Far-Eastern region

In order to ensure the innovative socio-economic development of the Far-Eastern region, professional personnel are needed to strengthen the infrastructure and economic base of the Far East. However, negative trends in the demographic situation, the outflow of population make it difficult to achieve the goals set. The share of young people in the Far-Eastern region, which is a strategic resource for the development of regional community and a carrier of the innovative potential of the region, is decreasing particularly rapidly. In this regard, the preservation and development of youth capacity is a priority of public policy. The article analyzed trends in the development of youth potential (taking into account the demographic situation of the region) necessary for the further progress and development of the territory. Special attention is paid to the problem of attracting applicants to study on the higher education educational programs in the different fields of training/specialties.

Keywords: youth, youth capacity, youth policy, social and economic development of the region, the Far-Eastern region, region demography, results of the USE.
